Did You Anticipate This Remarkable Growth?

Each of you, even if you go no further about the city than from your homes to your work, have noticed the stir and activity of growing Memphis.

In stores and banks, in crowded hotels you have observed to some degree how your city has grown.

But the best index of all to a city's growth is the telephone development.

It required 3,000 new telephones so far this year to handle the increased business. Even this large number is not all you want. Another thousand or two telephones will be taken on quickly at the rate we are providing equipment and facilities to care for them.

We want this additional business. We need the revenue it would bring. You wouldn't refuse business if you could possibly handle it. Neither would we.

Back in 1917 we planned for Memphis' normal growth by placing orders for central office equipment to meet our needs. We didn't get it until May, 1919, and as fast as it was installed it was used up by waiting patrons.

Few if any people could foresee the great demand for offices, business places and homes which now confronts Memphis. No one could anticipate such a remarkable growth. Since your astute business men and investors could not see it, is it strange that we in turn did not?

All this increased population and prosperity meant more operators and more workers for the telephone company. We had to compete with you for help and we were at a disadvantage because ours is a public utility with fixed rates.

Every business house in Memphis wants more men and women. The cry of every industry is for nore and better workers. If we didn't have any, there would be more than 700 for you, but you would have no telephone service, so all of us must divide the available workers and let no business or industry suffer unduly.

Telephone service is essential to the health, welfare and safety of the community. Patience with the telephone workers who are inexperienced and your encouragement of those who are striving to meet your expectations, will reward you.

In this way the telephone men and women of Memphis, who are so deeply concerned about this problem, will gain fresh courage in their efforts to improve the service of you — their friend and neighbor.
